What is elective home education (EHE)?

Elective home education is the parent or carers choice to take legal and financial responsibility for ensuring their child(ren) receives a suitable, efficient and full-time education out of a school setting (at home or otherwise).

As a parent or carer, you have a legal right to choose to educate your child(ren) at home. Parents are not required to register or seek approval from the local authority. The exception is where a child has an Education, Health and Care Plan (EHCP) and attends a maintained special school, or is subject to a School Attendance Order. In this circumstance, Solihull Council would need to approve the child moving to elective home education. All electively home educating parents are required to satisfy the local authority that a suitable, efficient and full-time education is being provided.

If you are thinking about educating your child(ren) at home or are already educating your child(ren) at home you may find this document helpful, along with our leaflet which you can find on our website.

Listed below are some important documents that should be read before you decide to begin EHE. They explain the law regarding EHE and information about the provision. The Solihull EHE policy specifies what we, as a Council, are responsible for in terms of EHE.

Considerations

1. Consider what your reason for home education is.

The choice to home educate is yours as parents. It is always best if the decision to home educate is a well-considered and positive choice for your family. You should not be made to feel like you have no other choice but to home educate by your child's school. Please contact us if this is the case.

If your family is experiencing problems with your child's current school, teacher or head teacher, please try to work with the school to resolve these problems. If, at any point, you wish for your child to return to a school setting, they would usually be offered a place back at the school they most recently left. Therefore, it would be beneficial to resolve any issues in case you wish for them to return to education at a later stage.

2. Consider the thoughts and feelings of your child(ren).

It is important that you think about the social and emotional impact home education may have on your child. If they would be negatively affected by the change, perhaps consider an alternative option to home education or identify how you would overcome this. Many home educating families in Solihull meet up so that their children can enjoy exciting social activities together.

3. Consider what subjects you would like to teach and how.

It is important to consider what you would like your child to know and learn before home educating so you can ensure you are equipped to be able to teach it. It could be very costly if you need to hire a tutor to teach certain aspects of a curriculum, that are more complex and specialist, particularly in secondary education.

4. Consider the costs of EHE.

When a child is in home education, their education is solely the financial responsibility of the parent or carer. Therefore, you must consider the amount of money that is needed to provide resources (such as books, worksheets and practical resources, like art supplies), equipment (including a computer) and opportunities to go on educational visits, etc.

Furthermore, it is important that your child develops socially. Therefore, it may be beneficial for them to join a club to ensure they are meeting children their own age. Most clubs require fees to be paid upon joining.

Additional costs may arise if you wish for your child to sit examinations to gain qualifications such as GCSEs and A-levels. Each exam can be taken for a fee at an exam centre. Your child would be entered for exams as a private candidate.

5. Consider your environment.

Guidance states that 'home accommodation which is noisy and/or cramped is likely to make it very difficult for a child to learn and make satisfactory progress'.

Therefore, you must ensure that you can provide an environment that is conducive to learning for your child(ren). If the home is not always suitable, a local library may be an alternative, more suitable setting that you could use as required.

6. Consider how you can support your child to develop socially.

Social development is an essential part of growing up to be a 'citizen of modern Britain'. It is therefore important that you provide your child with ample and regular opportunities to mix with other children, formally and informally.

This could be through meeting up with friends previously made at school, joining an EHE group and meeting other families through the group, playing with children in the neighbourhood or joining a club.

Step 1: Tell the school and/or Council

Once you have decided to home educate, parents should inform their child's school. Ideally, we encourage parents to let the school know prior to making the decision so that they can support you with the decision and address any concerns that may lead you to home educate. Solihull's policy requires parents to let the school know your decision to home education in writing, explaining that you wish to home educate your child and when you wish for the school to remove your child from their register/roll. The school will then inform Solihull Council of your choice.

Your child must start full-time education once they reach compulsory school age. This is on 31 December, 31 March or 31 August following their fifth birthday - whichever comes first. If your child's fifth birthday is on one of those dates then they reach compulsory school age on that date. If you are choosing to electively home educate from the point at which your child becomes of statutory school age, you are currently under no obligation to let the Council know. This may change in the future as the Government continues to debate statutory registration for all EHE children. However, whilst not required, it would be helpful to inform us as we can offer information and support.

Step 2: Contact from Solihull Council

There should be no significant break between the end of schooling and the provision of a good education for your child(ren) at home. Time lost in your child(ren)'s education is very difficult to recover.

Solihull Council is entitled to make informal enquiries of parents to establish what education is being provided. Parents are under no legal obligation to agree to such a meeting or to produce specific evidence, but you should consider carefully the reasons for not doing so, what is in the best interests of your child, and the most sensible approach to take.

If you do not do enough to satisfy the Council about the education being provided at home, we may have no option but to conclude that the education does not meet requirements.

Step 3: Providing Evidence

The Attendance & EHE Advisory Team request that parents share information about their child's education annually. We are currently requesting information to be shared as a report; however, we are happy to meet with you to discuss your child's education if you prefer. You and your child may wish to show us some of the resources you have and some work that has been produced.

To ensure staff understand your child's education and the suitability of it we have created a checklist comprised of key points in the DfE's EHE guidance. You can find this in the Education Support Packs on our website. We always find it helpful to have a detailed overview of what your child's education is like and for us see a small amount of work that your child had produced.

Once we have learned about the education that you are providing for your child, a decision will be made by a group of Attendance & EHE Advisory officers as to whether the education is suitable. This is a group decision to maintain consistency based upon it fulfilling a variety of factors including being full-time, suitable and efficient as outlined in our checklist.

Step 4: Further contact

If we find the education being provided is suitable, we will contact you after 12 months to arrange a further visit or for you to provide evidence that your child continues to receive a suitable education at home. We will always be available for support by email or phone in the meantime.

If we find the education being provided to be unsuitable, the Council has a duty to act. However, we are committed to working with you to ensure that you can provide a suitable education that meets your child's needs. Please see our policy for more details regarding this.

Teaching and Learning

Teaching and learning can be most effective when a plan, do and review cycle is used. There is no expectation for you to use this, but it may be helpful.

Plan: Choose what you want to teach (your curriculum) and gather the resources to support learning.

Do: Teach the skill/knowledge and get your child to apply their learning to an activity (these can be practical or written activities).

Review: Check their work and understanding (e.g. marking and/or providing verbal feedback about their work) to see if you can advance learning or the learning should be repeated. You could also use mini assessments to check long-term learning; are your children learning more and remembering more over time?

Curriculum

Unlike educational settings, it is not a statutory requirement for home educating families to teach the National Curriculum or the EYFS framework. However, they can be useful documents, especially at the start of your home education journey, along with any recent school reports – if your child has attended a school.

The National Curriculum is a document that outlines the expected learning standards in all curriculum subjects for children from Year 1 upwards. Similarly, the Early Years and Foundation Stage (EYFS) framework outlines learning standards for children who are in nursery and reception where learning is mainly developed through play and hands-on experiences.

Both the National Curriculum and the EYFS framework can provide a valuable understanding of what your child would be learning if they were at an educational setting, so you can prepare work or plan learning experiences that are suitable to their age and ability.

The National Curriculum and EYFS framework are also helpful documents to use if home education is only being used for a short period and you would like your child to return to school at a later date. Teaching the National Curriculum or the EYFS framework (for those in reception and nursery) will help your child transition to school more easily as they will have learnt similar content to their peers.

As the parent and carer providing education, you have the freedom to choose what your child learns. As previously mentioned, you are not required to teach the EYFS framework or the National Curriculum but may find parts of the documents helpful. Feel free to focus learning around your child's interests or the subjects you feel are most valuable. Nevertheless, to ensure your child is able to grow up as 'a citizen of modern Britain', an appropriate level of literacy and numeracy should be taught.

Recording Learning

Keeping a record of learning can be helpful for reviewing and recapping what has been learned. You can use photographic evidence, collect worksheets, complete booklets, record voice notes, make posters, update scrapbooks and so much more.

Feedback

You do not have to mark your child's work but it is important that you look at the work afterwards to see if it is correct. Doing this is a helpful tool to see whether the learning was successful and provide the opportunity to give reinforcing praise. If there are any mistakes, you are then able to explain and clarify anything that has been misunderstood. Making mistakes provides opportunity to learn more!

Praise

Praise is just as important for supporting your child in their learning. It can help motivate and encourage further learning. Praise can be given in many ways:

- Verbal praise.
- Displaying work that you or your child are proud of.
- Sticker charts (for example: your child could work to get a certain amount of stickers to receive a reward or treat for their hard work).
- Storing work that you or your child are proud of in a special folder or box.

Progress

You should review prior learning regularly to ensure what has been taught has been remembered and thus learned. This will help you to plan what to recap and teach next. It will also help you to identify which resources and teaching styles are working best for your child.

You could check your child's progress in the following ways: mini quizzes, worksheets and tests. There are no requirements to do this but they can be a helpful tool.

Who can provide provision?

Although your child(ren) may be electively home educated, this does not mean they have to remain at home for their entire education. There are a variety of ways to educate your child away from a school setting. It is up to you, as the parents and carers, to choose what education you provide for your child. Ultimately, the education needs to be full-time (which is defined as taking up a significant proportion of the week), efficient and suitable for age, ability, aptitude and SEND needs. The following are some possible provision choices:

- Educate full-time at home yourselves
- Employ a part-time tutor to supplement the education you provide at home (tutors should have enhanced DBS checks and should be able to show you their certificate [see note on safeguarding below])
- Join a registered tuition centre who can offer small group classes that supplement learning at home
- EHE community groups and classes
- Online courses, tuition and lessons
- Flexi-schooling as mentioned in the guidance (but this is at the school's discretion)
- College (some offer part-time education for children, who are 14 plus, to support them with qualifications)

Whatever provision you decide on, it is important the learning is supported at home and additional work is being completed. Please remember that the education you provide should not isolate your child. Ideally, they should have the opportunity within the week to develop socially by meeting children of a similar age.

Important note relating to safeguarding your child:

If you employ others in person or virtually to supplement the education that you are providing at home, you will need to make sure that your child is properly safeguarded. The current Department for Education guidance for parents states:

“Parents may choose to employ other people to educate their child, though they themselves will continue to be responsible for the education provided. They will also be responsible for ensuring that those whom they engage are suitable to have access to children. Parents will therefore wish to satisfy themselves by taking up appropriate references such as an appropriate Disclosure and Barring Service (DBS) check and local authorities should encourage them to do this”

Similarly, if you choose for your child to attend an out of school setting for part of the week, you will need to be satisfied that all health and safety standards are met at the setting and that staff are vetted to ensure that they are suitable to have access to children. Any such setting that is providing full-time education to 5 or more pupils of statutory school age, or to 1 pupil with an Education Health and Care Plan, or to 1 pupil who is Looked After (in the care of the local authority) must be registered with the Department for Education as an Independent School. Failure to do so would mean that the provider is operating illegally.

Assessments and Qualifications

Children who are being home educated do not need to take any formal assessments or gain qualifications, including Key Stage 1 and 2 SAT tests, GCSEs and A- levels.

SATs

SAT tests are not offered externally. All prior Key Stage 1 and Key Stage 2 SATs tests are on the government website with the coinciding mark schemes for anyone to print off. The most recent SATs papers are published each year once SATs week has taken place in May. You may wish to use these tests as a personal assessment tool but there are no requirements to do so.

GCSEs & iGCSEs

GCSEs and IGCSEs can be taken at any age, when you and your child think they are ready. It is up to you, as the educating parent or carer, to organise and fund these if you wish for them to be taken.

To take a GCSE, your child must be registered with an exam centre (within a school or externally) so their exam officer can register them with an exam board. You cannot apply directly to an exam board. Be aware that there are many exam boards that cover the same subjects, and each exam board has their own specification for what must be taught in the subject. Make sure you know these specifications and have covered them through your child's education at home. You can access the specifications and test papers online on the different exam board websites.

IGCSEs stands for International General Certificate for Secondary Education but can sometimes be offered to home educated pupils. You can find more information online.

Other Qualifications

There are other companies which offer awards and qualifications, such as functional skills. Functional Skills are qualifications designed to develop essential maths, English and ICT skills in order to apply them in employment and everyday life. They can be used as formal qualifications to apply for colleges (but this is college dependent).

Functional skills are not the only other qualifications out there. Other companies offer their own such as ASDAN. ASDAN is an educational charity that offer curriculum programs and can award nationally approved qualifications. The qualifications are aimed at developing personal, social and employability skills. See their websites for information:

<https://www.asdan.org.uk/>

When choosing a qualification to complete, please consider whether it is going to be recognised by further educational settings or employers.

Support and Resources

- Other home educating families can be a great resource: you can share ideas, learning resources, learn from each other's experiences and support one another. You may even be able to arrange opportunities to meet up, socialise or for your child to learn within a group. You can find many EHE communities online and through social media.
- The following documents have been created to support parents and carers to provide a fulltime, efficient and suitable education. There are no expectations for the documents to be used. The documents are here to support and provide ideas; only you, as the educating parent, can decide if the resources are suitable for your child.

Included within this document are the following:

- Templates to support planning and timetabling
 - Hyperlinks to resources (free and fee constrained)
 - Hyperlinks to places to visit for educational purposes
 - Hyperlinks to organisations and groups that offer support to home educating families
